Brief Description of Program:

The Teacher Corps Project at New York University is a teacher training program designed to prepare former Peace Corps Volunteers for teaching in disadvantaged schools. A candidate for this program must have a Bachelor of Arts degree in one of the following subjects: Math, Science, Language Arts or Social Studies.

The program is broken down into three basic components. Pre-service, In-service and Post-service. Pre-service Interns use most morning hours for working with local agencies in community-related activities and observing in and working with educational activities sponsored by the New York City School System and community organizations. Interns use their afternoon hours for work in University and Public School classrooms. In-service: During the academic year new Interns gradually assume responsibilities in the school to which they are assigned and ultimately are fully responsible for active participation in community-directed functions. Post-service: Interns are responsible for attendance at an intensified workshop focusing upon the synthesis of theory and practice and are responsible for the development of pilot curricula and research projects.

Courses given at New York University in conjunction with the education of the Interns focus upon the educational and social aspects of poverty; psychology and the education of the slow learner; the role of the Teacher and the Curriculum of the schools. Social, economic and cultural forces which contribute to the slum child's malfunctioning within the classroom and the techniques required for analyses and remediation; the objective analysis of the interaction process in the classroom and implications for teacher behavior and student achievement; and the development, on the part of the Intern, of skills necessary for the teaching of reading and individual subjects.
